Building a Better Workplace

Join Us for a Community-Building Circle

Rush-Henrietta transportation employees recently learned about Restorative Practices and that program was well received. Now, the district offers an opportunity to take part in the most popular form of Restorative Practice, known as Community-Building Circles.

What are Community-Building Circles?

Community-Building Circles are an extremely effective strategy designed to help us improve our relationships and build connections with one another. During a Community-Building Circle, we gather to share with one another in a structured and supportive way. The process is designed to help us develop:

- a deeper appreciation of what we have in common.
- a more clear understanding of what makes us different.
- a greater level of mutual understanding with one another.
- an ability to problem-solve and make decisions together.
- a foundation for resolving conflicts and repairing harm.
- a better sense of belonging to a group or organization.
